Article Review 2 Assignment

The article that I am reviewing and writing about is College developmental learners’ perceptions, knowledge, and experiences with aged person. The purpose of this piece article to further understand how college students perceive older people. According to Maria T. Valeri-Gold there have been several studies on elementary school aged students and how they perceive older people, but surveys lack information based off of college students. As far as ethical considerations no single subject in essence is named therefore ethics are considered for the study to protect not only students but elderly identities. The way the researchers collected the data was giving out a five page booklet names “My Perceptions about the Aged”. In the booklet the first three pages were general questions on how to perceive the elderly, whereas in the last two pages students were instructed to draw a young and old. The total amount of participants in this study was thirty-two students. The breakdowns of ages are in the proximity of seventeen to twenty-seven years of age. To breakdown the participants even further there were nine men and twenty-three women. There were different races like: African American, Hispanic Americans, and Caucasians. The results showed that in question 1 “what are your perceptions toward the aged?” most of the students put a positive answer whereas six students marked a response that was negative. After all the questions were reviewed according to the study the majority of college level students viewed the older community in a positive manner about 81% was positive. There were 19% of students that had a negative response to these questions. The main method to view the results was in the form of tables. Therefore the tables and surveys full support that most students look positively towards older people. The two strengths in this study is the fact that this survey does not only require options but to draw and get a real perception of the ideas college students have towards older generations. Well the only limitation is of course there could have been a lot more students and more ethnicities involved. The final view of this survey is that most students perceive older people in a good way.

Valeri-Gold, M. T. (1996). College developmental learners' perceptions, knowledge, and